	Positive aspect: really nice attitude of the winemaker towards our visit. He was willing to answer all of our questions and show us the whole winery. A negative aspect was definitely the marking of the winery. The inscription was really unreadable and at first I passed by the winery without realising it.
I really liked this visit because even though they were at the process of bottling young wine that day, the wine maker showed us the production part of winery and he was really friendly. At the end we had a nice tasting session and a quite long conversation about wine industry, his experience and our studies and possible future. The atmosphere of the whole visit was really friendly and calm. I appreciated that we could taste also wines from his father's production and see the differences of generations.		POINTS OF ATTENTION: 😊 Selection of wines:          Friendliness and know-how of staff:          Pricing:          Wine Quality:          Overall impression:
	Positive aspect: There were beautiful pictures of the vineyard's locations of the winery on the wall and I could easily imagine the things being described from the staff. Negative part: The women, who provided the wine tasting, halfway through tasting just left us alone and started to talk to a 'stranger', who came to ask for the toilet.
I do not know what to think about this winery visit because we got there, and it was empty and quiet even though we managed this visit in advance. On the other hand, the co-owner was nice after all and did not mind opening even the more expensive wines for us. Unfortunately, we did not go to the production part, which surprised and disappointed me a little because we were a group of 4 so I guess we could have had the chance to take just a quick look at least. But their wines were really good.		POINTS OF ATTENTION: 😊 Selection of wines:          Friendliness and know-how of staff:          Pricing:          Wine Quality:          Overall impression:
	Positive aspect: We had the chance to taste a lot of wines from the production – even more than the ones on the picture. On the other hand, I have to say that it was really hard to concentrate on the wines sometimes, because it was so COLD in the tasting room! Girls were sitting there in the jackets the whole time.
I had a good first impression from the winery, because we could easily find the winery thanks to signs and the co-owner was waiting for us at managed time. When we got in the tasting room glasses were prepared and we started the tasting. I do not know why, but I had a feeling that the woman did not want to say a lot about the winery, she was talking only about the characteristics of the wines and not much about the winery. Unfortunately, we did not go into the wine cellar because she told us that it was too messy at that time.		POINTS OF ATTENTION: 😐 Selection of wines:          Friendliness and know-how of staff:          Pricing:          Wine Quality:          Overall impression:
There are a lot of aspects, that can make a winery visit the perfect one. For me the most important aspect is communication and effort from the staff to make the visit stand out. Winemakers could also set adequate prices for the tasting or winery tours, so then me or any visitor, do not need to feel bad in case they do not buy anything at the end just simply because they did not like the wines or the tour. The winery visit should include not only the vineyard tour or tasting sessions but also a look into the production part as well, because that is what (some) people are curious about, where the wine gets its actual taste. If there are lots of wines for the wine tasting, winemakers should provide a piece of bread or something which can neutralize the taste. Last but not least – humility. I appreciate when I can taste awarded wines, but if the employees or winemakers talk too much about the awards and how many they won, it can easily annoy people very much.
